6 YEARS FAVORED AS PRESIDENTIAL TERM OF OFFICE

Members of Congress Express Convictions Opposing Reelection.

ers of Congress in favor of increasing the Presidential term to six years, with religibility at the end of that time, is evident from the results of The New York Herald's symposium on the subject. Members of both the Senate and the House of Representatives were invited to give their opinions regarding a longer Presidential Lorge and a three term in the House of Representatives is about the same, but with respect to this second question there is a marked division of opinion between advocates of a three year and a four year term. Several replies suggested a six year term for members of the House.

Congress themselves and causes or advocates of a three year and a four years term. The system was not, however, devised for the convenience of Representatives, but in order to afford the people frequent and recurring opportunity to register their sovereign will.

Reasons for Opinions.

Opinion in favor of a longer single term for President, as evidenced in these replies, is based chiefly on the conviction that the President could and would devete himself more unreservedly to the country's welfare if considerations of a second term were removed. The unsettling effect of frequent Presidential elections upon the nation's business is also advanced as-an argument in favor of a longer term.

Following are some of the replies in addition to those printed in The New York Heraald of last week:

SENATOR MILES POINDEXTER (Rep.). Washington—I am opposed to both proposals. Six years is too long for the capable and understanding Chief Executive.

As to the second question, my answer is in the affirmative. The average Congressman has not a fair chance in a short two-year term, especially as Congress he has hardly entered upon his duties as Congressman before he must be function of the constitution whereby at the end of four years the people can determine the fitness of the incumbent for office, and if found satisfactory released to six years. It is more than the proposals to the people, and thereby keeps in close touch with the mass of the people, as one branch of the legislative body which is stabilized by the Senate. I think the fathers of the Constitution were very happy in the arrangement they made about these matters.

SENATOR JULIUS KARN (Rep.).

fathers of the Constitution were very happy in the arrangement they made about these matters.

SENATOR JULIUS KAHN (Rep.).
California—I believe the Presidentiater of four years as provided in the Constitution is ample. However, there should be a limitation, in my opinion, to the effect that no President shall be elected for more than two terms. I am not in favor of the extension of the term of the Representatives beyond two years. These officials are supposed to come from the body of the citizenship of the country and ought to answer to their densitients during the two years for which they are elected in regard to their action on pending legislation.

SENATOR OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD (Dem.). Alabama—I think that to fix the President's term at six years and to make him ineligible for reelection would to a large extent divorce the President from partisan politics, and the six year term would give an administration a greater security in working out politics. There can be no doubt in the mind of the President's term of office to six years. There can be no doubt in the mind of the President's term of office to six years.

My feasons are that a democrate form of government, formulated as our Government is, must respond quickly to the demands of the people when a certain form of relief is necessary, and the only way they can get this relief in many instances is through an election; and it is my view that many Congress-
